"The Evening World" Enlists the Commission Merchants.

Tickets to Be Given the Worthy Poor for Vegetables.

Dealer Mergentine Starts by Giving Out Four Truckloads.

Through the generosity of the commission merchants of New York, "The Evening World" will give vegetables of all kinds to the suffering poor, particularly to the children, and means of support for their children, and who, while willing to work, cannot find employment of any kind.

First on the list of liberal-hearted commission merchants in this work of charity are Messrs. J. J. Farnham and one of the largest produce establishments in New York, at 80 Murray street and another at 250 Greenwich street. He will supply daily to such deserving persons as "The Evening World" may designate, enough to eat in the way of vegetables. The plan will be to have "The Evening World" work in conjunction with "The Western Sun."

Every morning, those who are particularly destitute, will be given tickets to call on their neighbors and Mr. Mercantile, at his produce store, 20

The vegetables will consist of potato, turnips, cabbages, carrots, beans, parsnips, green peas, cauliflower, lettuce, table salad, gherkins, sweet potatoes, onions and corn.

For several days past M. Margerintz has been awaiting lists of the poor from the various districts who have received and which was attended to tomorrow by the aid of Rabbi Lowenthal of the east side.

Jacob Hamburger, manager for Mrs. Margerintz's work, says he is busy with an "Evening World" reporter to relieve the poor whose names were sent him last week. The list of names were heavily laden, and comprised in all about 600 names. He had already given $100 to $500. The first stop was made at "The World's" Free Bread Fund office where it was found that a detective had just left a report of a family in utter destitution at 225 East 79th St.

On arriving there "The Evening World" reporter called on the doorkeeper to inquire into the family's misery and need. She lives on the third floor in the rear. With her is her mother-in-law, who needs help every day, and two young boys, John Thomas, ten years old, and her son, Jacob, eight years old.
